

Letter from Mabel Hubbard Bell to Alexander Graham Bell, April 7, 1903, with transcript

Letter from Mrs. Alexander Graham Bell to Dr. Alexander Graham Bell. 1331 Connecticut Avenue, Washington, D. C. Tuesday, April 7, (1903.) Dear Sandie:

I send you herewith your cards which I am sorry I forgot yesterday.

Your father seems bright and enjoying the young life that is thronging around him. Robbie and Elsie were with him a long time Daisy read "When Love is Young" all the evening, and he was laughing heartily over my story of Stuyvesant's two honeymoons. He is in the front room now, but Dr. Sowers said it was quite as well for him not to go out. His friends Mr. and Mrs. Wilkes of Brantford are in town and I have asked them to dine with us this evening and they are coming. It is deadly dull without you to keep us all on the jump. I think I would die of ennui if anything happened to you.

Mr. Zable said he "reported" to your father for duty, but his services were not desired.

Have not another thing to tell you. I was taking stock of my household goods all this morning and am tired.

I hope Miss Mc Cowan does not intend to kill you, her program looks like it. You must not allow yourself to be detained however, our invitations for the 18th for Gipseys dinner are out and besides I want you.

Yours ever lovingly.
